Encounter

The newsletter of the Mercia Region of the Battlefields Trust

Introduction

Welcome to the Spring edition of Encounter. As the weather improves we enter the battlefield walking season. Traditionally the Mercia Region's first walk of the year is Stow and this took place on 19 March, two days before the anniversary of the battle. The conditions are never the same from one year to the next; as I said to someone on this year's walk, I have led it with snow on the ground and a wind chill of about -4 degrees and also in glorious sunshine in the low 20s centigrade. I'm hoping for more of the latter for the remainder of our walks this year!

Recent Events

Over the Autumn and Winter a successful series of talks focused on John Hampden's battlefields took place at the Buckinghamshire County Museum in Aylesbury. This was a collaboration between the Mercia region, John Hampden Society and the museum which saw takings from the talks shared between these organisations. After an initial talk about Buckinghamshire in the Civil War by Professor Ian Beckett, subsequent presentations focused on Southam and Edgehill, Brentford and Turnham Green, and the siege of Reading and Chalgrove field. The Stow (1646) walk mentioned above saw a 25 strong party visit the traditional site of the battle and heard competing theories about where it was most likely fought, including what the archaeology undertaken recently by the Region tells us. The group also gamely deployed as a seventeenth century army with participants forming cavalry and infantry regiments and then practiced the firing and counter-march of a block of musketeers.

Mercia Region AGM

Following the Stow walk the Mercia Region AGM took place. The Chairman and Treasurer's reports were both accepted and the current committee elected to serve another year. Tony Spicer then briefed the meeting on the proposed information board at the Teme and Severn rivers confluence at Worcester to commemorate and inform about the bridge of boats deployed by Cromwell there during the battle of Worcester (1651). The region has committed £500 to the project and the meeting was pleased with the progress made in identifying a site. Phil Steele separately told the meeting about a proposed community archaeological project at Northampton (1460) and asked if the region was interested in offering support. The meeting confirmed that in principle it was willing to offer support, but needed to understand more about the project to enable it to judge how best to achieve this.

Radcot Bridge Information Board

The Region has been progressing the production of an information board at Radcot bridge, which saw battles there between supporters and opponents of Richard II in December 1387 and between royalists and parliamentarians in May 1645. Alan Watkins, the landlord of The Swan public house which is adjacent to the bridge is sponsoring the project. An initial draft board has been developed and is currently out for comment.

Chalgrove 1643 Update

I reported in January on South Oxfordshire District Council's plans to build over 3,000 homes on the site of Chalgrove airfield, a WWII photo-reconnaissance base, part of which covers the Historic England registered battlefield of Chalgrove. It was here that John Hampden, a leading parliamentary statesman and colonel of a regiment of foot, was mortally wounded. The Battlefields Trust, John Hampden Society and Historic England all objected to the proposal. In response the Council has amended its plans, with the latest version showing no intention now to build on the registered battlefield area and natural screening to be put in place between the part of the airfield that will be built on and the battlefield to protect the latter's setting. The region is monitoring the situation closely.

Tewkesbury 1471

In late January the petition organised by the Tewkesbury Battlefield Society to support its campaign to purchase the Gastons site on the registered battlefield was discussed by the Borough Council. The meeting supported the protection of the site against development and the desire to do this through constructive engagement with all parties. The Council agreed it was committed to developing the battlefield as a heritage, cultural and economic asset and asked that its officers look at doing this through its planning policy and by exploring with the main parties locally how the battlefield can be improved as a cultural and heritage resource.
